

SEO & AI Visibility Findings — guirys.com

Prepared by Joshua Rotenberg (Solenzo) · Site crawl & on-page analysis · August 2026

Overall Score: 34/100 — Critical

Significant gaps across multiple dimensions. Addressable with a prioritized plan — quick technical wins first, content authority second.

Pages crawled: 1 · Internal links found: 30

Quick Wins — Google & Mobile Presence

What local customers see on Google and the site before they ever call, and the fastest fixes.

- Google Business Profile isn't linked to the website (completeness 1/5) — claim/complete the profile with category, hours, phone, website, and photos so customers and Google connect the two.
- Mobile homepage has no tap-to-call CTA at the top (call-to-action 3/5) — a ready-to-call visitor has to hunt for how to reach you; add a tap-to-call number and a "Book now / Request service" button above the fold.
- Homepage is missing an H1 tag.
- Title tag is too long (69 characters) — will be truncated in search results.
- Meta description is too long (219 characters) — will be truncated in search results.

Key Findings

- Business identity is historically strong (since 1899), but the current site conflates art supplies, house paint, furniture, blinds, and home décor into one offering without clear positioning.
- No founder story, local-location emphasis, or expertise narrative — no author attribution or team credibility signals.
- Only a homepage exists — no blog, guides, or educational content, so there are no topical-authority signals for search or AI systems to pick up on.
- Product listings have no surrounding context or how-to content that would help customers find them via search.
- No pillar / hub-and-spoke content structure — the homepage is a flat product catalog with no architecture linking related topics.

AI Visibility Snapshot

How guirys.com shows up when AI assistants (ChatGPT, Claude, etc.) answer buyer questions in this category — a newer but increasingly relevant channel alongside traditional search.

- 72% of AI recommendations in this category currently miss the brand (estimate, based on industry modeling — flagged as such in the source tool).
- Position type: N-to-1, "Lost in Category" — present in the conversation but overshadowed by stronger competitor associations. Topical breadth 1/5, authority depth 3/5.
- Immediate priority per the tool: build deeper, consistent presence in 2-3 core topics — the single biggest lever is Information Gain, currently 0/5 (no original content, case studies, or first-person customer outcomes on site).

Competitor Comparison (category visibility)

Brand	Visibility / Rank
Blick Art Materials	82% — #1
Sherwin-Williams	75% — #2
Michaels	68% — #3
guirys.com	20% — #4
Industry average	58%

Sample AI response for "best art supplies for professional artists" does not currently mention the brand; competitors are cited for extensive product categorization, detailed guides, and educational content that establishes topical authority.

Top Opportunities

- Add customer testimonials with real names and specific outcomes.
- Publish case studies or project spotlights showing how local customers solved real design challenges with Guiry's help.
- Create an "Our Story" page — founding history, owner/manager names, and the competitive edge that comes with 125 years in business.
- Build a blog covering beginner art supplies, interior paint color selection, furniture styling tips, and DIY home décor projects to capture search traffic and demonstrate expertise.

Where I'd Start

- Week 1: Google Business Profile link, homepage H1, title/meta tag lengths, mobile tap-to-call CTA — all fast, no-dependency fixes.
- 30-60 days: "Our Story" page, first 2-3 named customer testimonials/case studies, and a content foundation organized around the site's real product categories instead of one flat catalog page.
- Ongoing: Expand topical coverage category by category, track ranking/traffic movement, and iterate based on what's actually converting.
