Re: Marketing Manager

Dear Hiring Team,

I am applying for the Marketing Manager role. The program you describe, where you score a vendor, form a commercial view of their demand generation, and then spend personalization only where the account value justifies it, is close to what I already built at Solenzo. I run an automated audit workflow that reads a business's digital footprint, scores it, and enrolls the account in personalized outreach. It has enrolled 180+ contacts, and the scoring logic exists specifically so the deep, hand-built version of a message goes to the accounts that earn it.

Three things line up with what you are hiring for. Research: I run competitor analysis, keyword gap work, and audits of a company's search and ad presence, and the point of that work is always a commercial recommendation rather than a report. Pipeline: I closed six new-client deals averaging roughly $22K each at Fetch & Funnel, about $130K+ in bookings, and ranked top three in sales on a team of 8 to 15 at Accelo while quota roughly doubled, so being measured on meetings and revenue instead of engagement is the environment I come from. Vendor fluency: at Accelo I sold CRM and project-management software to agencies and professional-services firms, and at Birdeye I onboarded and managed 15 to 20 reseller partners on a reputation and reviews platform, retaining all but one. Software vendors and review marketplaces are familiar ground, and I have built in HubSpot as well as GoHighLevel.

Two honest gaps. I have not run event-led account campaigns, so the pre-event meeting motion would be new to me, and my account scoring has been built in CRM and workflow logic rather than in a dedicated intent-data platform. Both are mechanics on top of judgment I already have about which accounts deserve the effort. I would welcome the chance to walk through how I would build the first version of the target account list and scoring model.

Sincerely,

Joshua Rotenberg
