Re: Revenue Enablement Platform Program Manager

Dear NetApp Hiring Team,

I'm applying for the Revenue Enablement Platform Program Manager role because the underlying work, keeping priorities, timelines, and decisions visible across teams that don't naturally sit in one place, is what I already do at Solenzo. I coordinate concurrent workstreams across CRM, SEO, paid media, and content for a client portfolio, translate ambiguous requirements into scoped deliverables with owners and timelines, and document every decision so follow-through doesn't depend on memory.

That same discipline shows up earlier in my career. At Level Agency I built the reporting frameworks and led the Quarterly Business Reviews that turned channel performance into leadership-ready updates. At Birdeye I tracked adoption and utilization data across 15-20 partner accounts to catch risk early and escalate it with a recommendation rather than waiting for it to become a problem, retaining all but one partner in the book. At Wix I managed a team of onboarding specialists and standardized the process and QA checkpoints that kept concurrent client launches on schedule.

I want to be direct about where my background differs from a traditional enterprise program manager: I haven't worked inside a platform stack like The Sales Hub, Mindtickle, or Saba, and my program work has been at agency and small-business scale rather than inside a large corporate transformation. What I bring is real, current experience doing the mechanics this role runs on, cross-functional coordination, dependency tracking, risk escalation, and documentation discipline, and I pick up new systems quickly. I'd welcome the chance to talk through how that would translate. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Joshua Rotenberg
