Re: Senior Lifecycle Marketing Manager

Dear Hiring Team,

I'm applying for the Senior Lifecycle Marketing Manager role because you describe the job the way I actually work: no agency, no contractor pool, you write the message, build it, send it, and read the results yourself. That's been my daily reality at Solenzo, the company I founded, for the past two and a half years.

I've architected a complete lifecycle-automation system there - 20+ workflows spanning lead capture, qualification, triggered booking with confirmations and reminders, no-show recovery, onboarding nurture, and long-term reactivation - and I build every piece of it myself: the agent logic, the copy, the monitoring that catches a broken sequence before a customer notices. I break down manual marketing workflows into agent architectures that score a business's digital footprint and generate personalized outreach at a level of detail I couldn't produce by hand, which is the same problem you describe as the reason this role exists. I've never touched Braze specifically, but the discipline - segmentation, triggered logic, personalization, and the judgment to know what actually deserves automating - is the same skill regardless of platform, and I pick up new tools fast because every client relationship starts with learning their existing stack.

I'd welcome the chance to walk through what I've built and what it did. Thank you for considering my application.

Sincerely,

Joshua Rotenberg
