Colorado Senate Democrats

Re: Deputy Communications Director

Dear Hiring Committee,

I'm writing about the Deputy Communications Director role. I should be upfront that my professional background is in marketing and communications for B2B and SaaS companies, not government or campaign work directly. What I'd bring is fifteen-plus years of writing under deadline for real audiences, a genuine, long-standing interest in Colorado and national politics, and a B.A. with a minor in Political Science that I've never had a job that let me use directly until now.

On the writing itself: at Solenzo I write and publish thought leadership content and newsletters for B2B audiences, draft direct-response copy and landing pages under deadline, and build messaging frameworks that keep a consistent voice while adapting to each audience, long-form and short-form, the same range this role asks for. I also designed and grew a free offer through organic LinkedIn content that enrolled 180 businesses, real experience building an audience with content rather than paid placement. And I'm comfortable working directly inside CMS platforms to keep a website current, which covers the Squarespace maintenance side of this role.

I also want to be direct about something the posting asks for explicitly: I'm a committed Democrat who votes blue no matter who. My own politics lean further left, I'm DSA-adjacent, but I understand the difference between personal ideology and the practical work of protecting and building a Democratic majority, and I'd bring that same discipline to representing the full caucus rather than any one faction or senator. I'd welcome the chance to talk through how that combination, real writing chops plus genuine investment in the work, would serve the caucus.

Sincerely,

Joshua Rotenberg
